MY

BLOG

OPEN SOURCE
SHARING CARE

SHUBHAM SINGH

A blog about the things I care about.

In todays world being an undergrad Computer science student ,I love to use open source software and care about the community . I always look forward to contribute to the community and also self grow .I care about the methods that new students are using today in open source some are vague and some are astonishing . Open source is a place where we can both learn and make mistake .This blog is about avoid making mistake because open source is softwares are used by millions of people and we cannot dissapoint them by adding our inefficient code . Also in todays projects documentation is very much essential it not only helps the new comer but also the user how product works and what are the function available .In the end I would like to say thanks to open source because it taught me a lot of skills that are required and also help me to meet some amazing people from the community.

Thank You